required

• In person or online

• Cost is never a barrier

Come once. See how it feels.

You do not need to know how to meditate, identify as Buddhist, or have the right words. Join quietly, listen, practice with us, and decide for yourself whether it is helpful.

WHAT A FIRST VISIT IS LIKE

Welcomed, guided, and free to simply listen.

You do not have to perform calm, sit a certain way, or share anything personal. The structure is simple and your participation remains your own.

01

Arrive as you are

Come a few minutes early. Someone will help you find the room, a chair or cushion, and anything else you need.

02

Practice with support

A facilitator offers clear guidance. You may change position, keep your eyes open, or step out whenever needed.

03

Choose your own pace

Listen quietly, join optional conversation, return often, or come only once. There is no pressure to speak or commit.

THIS WEEK AT RIM

A PRACTICE FOR THE WHOLE OF LIFE

Three things support one another.

You do not have to choose a category. Most people move naturally among practice, understanding, and relationship.

Practice

Meditation and embodied practices that cultivate steadiness, awareness, and a kinder relationship with experience.

Understanding

Buddhist teachings offered in practical language, exploring the causes of well-being and suffering.

Community

A sangha in which people practice, learn, remember one another, and offer care over time.

IN THE WORDS OF COMMUNITY MEMBERS

What people found when they arrived.

“RIM has been a safe place for me to bring my anxiety and brokenness—to feel supported and okay.”

COMMUNITY MEMBER

“After the first drop-in session, I knew I was home.”

COMMUNITY MEMBER

“The teachings feel accessible to newcomers while still being impactful for seasoned practitioners.”

COMMUNITY MEMBER

ROOTED IN A LIVING TRADITION

Accessible, grounded, and deeper than stress relief.

RIM draws from Insight Meditation and the teachings of the early Buddhist tradition. Practice supports our own well-being, the people whose lives touch ours, and the world we share.
